

LEGAL FRAMEWORK

International and European conventions

Lithuania has ratified various international conventions condemning FGM, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CAT), the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR), and the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (2010/C 83/02).

Criminal law

In Lithuania, general criminal law, in particular Article 135 of the Penal Code, consisting of the crime of grievous bodily injury, could be applied in the context of FGM. The principle of extraterritoriality is applicable, making FGM punishable even if it is committed outside the country.

Child protection law

General child protection laws could be applied in cases of FGM. In particular, Articles 7 and 10 from the Law on Fundamentals of Protection of the Rights of the Child refer to violence against a child as a serious crime and can result in the removal of the child from the family and suspension of parental custody in cases where there is a real threat to the child's health or life.

Asylum law

A special decision by the Migration Department at the Ministry of the Interior provides that girls (age range not specified) who are at real risk of FGM upon return to their country of origin can apply for asylum.

Professional secrecy law

General laws on professional secrecy and disclosure may be applied to report cases of performed or planned FGM. According to Article 9, section 4, of the Law on the Rights of Patients and Compensation for the Damage to their Health, health care institutions must immediately notify the law enforcement institutions of injured patients whose injury may have been the result of a criminal act.

About the study

In order to contribute to identifying and filling the gaps in prevalence data collection and support the development of strategies for combating female genital mutilation (FGM), the European Institute for Gender Equality has commissioned the 'Study to map the current situation and trends of female genital mutilation in 27 EU Member States and Croatia'. The study was launched at the request of Viviane Reding, Vice-President of the European Commission. It was conducted by the International Centre for Reproductive Health (ICRH) of the Ghent University and Yellow Window Management Consultants (a division of E.A.D.C.).

The desk research in the 27 EU Member States and Croatia and the in-depth research in nine EU Member States brings about the first collection of information and data, legal and policy framework, actors, tools and methods in the area of FGM in the EU. The different national approaches to tackle FGM in the EU were analysed and compared in order to identify practices with potential in prevention, protection, prosecution, provision of services, partnership and prevalence.

The data provided in this publication were collected through desk research conducted between December 2011 and April 2012. More information and references about the study are available at: eige.europa.eu

What is female genital mutilation?

- Female genital mutilation (FGM), also known as female genital cutting, is a form of gender-based violence. It comprises all procedures involving partial or total removal of the external female genitalia or other injury to the female genital organs for non-medical reasons.
- Female genital mutilation has negative effects on the health of women in the short, medium and long term and may even lead to death. It is carried out for both cultural and social reasons. Religious arguments tend to be used to justify the practice but there is no religious mandate for it.
- According to UNICEF, FGM is practised in more than 20 African countries spreading between Senegal in the west and Somalia in the east.
- Although overall figures are difficult to estimate, thousands of women and girls residing in the European Union may have been genitally mutilated or are at risk of FGM.
- The EU institutions and the Member States are committed to fighting FGM, as it is shown in the Commission's 'Strategy for equality between women and men (2010–2015)'. The Daphne III programme has played a crucial role in putting FGM on the agenda in several EU countries and in providing financial support for the implementation of transnational projects in this field.
- The European Parliament resolution of 14 June 2012 on ending female genital mutilation clearly stipulates that 'any form of female genital mutilation is a harmful traditional practice that cannot be considered part of a religion, but is an act of violence against women and girls which constitutes a violation of their fundamental rights'. The European Parliament calls on the Member States to take a firm action to combat this illegal practice.

POLICY FRAMEWORK

In Lithuania, specific policies dealing with FGM have not yet been put in place. However, several other policies dealing with the prevention of violence can be applied to FGM. These include the 'National Crime Prevention and Control Programme' of 2003, the 'National Strategy for Eliminating Violence against Women' and its action plan for 2009–2012, and the 'National Programme on Prevention of Violence against Children and Support for Children'. The Government of Lithuania has authorised the Ministry of Social Security and Labour to submit the programme, budget and planning on violence in the domestic sphere, for 2013–2020. This should be done in collaboration with the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Justice and Internal Affairs.

PREVALENCE OF FGM IN THE COUNTRY

In Lithuania, no prevalence study has so far been carried out on FGM. The Department of Migration reported that only 1% of the population consists of migrants, who come predominantly from neighbouring countries. In 2010, only two female migrants from Africa were residing in Lithuania, according to the Statistics Department of Lithuania.

Facts

- There is no FGM prevalence data available in Lithuania and the reported number of migrants from Africa is very low.

Figures

- In 2008, refugee status was granted to a one-and-a-half-year-old girl from Ethiopia based on the assumed risk of FGM.

What is gender-based violence?

- Gender-based violence is a violation of human rights and a form of discrimination. It is defined as violence directed against a person on the basis of gender. Gender-based violence reflects and reinforces inequalities between men and women and results in physical, mental and sexual harm. It includes, among others: domestic violence, rape, sexual harassment, sexual violence during conflict, female genital mutilation, forced marriages, forced prostitution, forced sterilisation, female infanticide and prenatal sex selection.
- In the European Pact for Gender Equality (2011–2020) the Council of the European Union reaffirms its commitment to fulfil EU ambitions regarding gender equality as mentioned in the Treaty. In particular, it emphasises the need to combat all forms of violence against women in order to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights by women and girls and, as a consequence, to enhance gender equality with a view to creating inclusive growth and development in labour markets in Europe.
- The European Parliament Resolution on the elimination of violence against women of 26 November 2009 urges Member States to improve, among others, their national laws and policies to combat all forms of violence against women, in particular through the development of comprehensive national action plans to combat violence against women.
- The European Commission's Strategy for Equality between Women and Men 2010–2015 emphasises the importance of combating violence against women. The Stockholm Programme 2009 highlights the need for special support and legal protection for victims of violence against women. In addition, the Women's Charter 2010 envisages the implementation of a comprehensive and effective policy framework to combat gender-based violence as well as the strengthening of the measures to eradicate female genital mutilation and other acts of violence.

About the European Institute for Gender Equality (EIGE)

The European Institute for Gender Equality is the EU knowledge centre on gender equality. EIGE supports policymakers and all relevant institutions in their efforts to make equality between women and men a reality for all Europeans and beyond, by providing them with specific expertise and comparable and reliable information on gender equality in Europe.
