

LEGAL FRAMEWORK

International and European conventions

Romania has ratified various international conventions condemning FGM, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CAT), the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR), and the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (2010/C 83/02).

Criminal law

General criminal law could be applied to cases of FGM, in particular Articles 180–184 of the Penal Code, which refer to the crime of (grievous) bodily injury. The act of assisting, aiding, abetting, counselling or procuring a third party to undertake FGM is similarly punishable.

Child protection law

In Romania, general child protection law could be used in cases of FGM. In particular, Article 306 of the Penal Code punishes the act of 'severely endangering, through measures or treatments of any type, the physical, intellectual or moral development of a minor, by parents or by any other person to whom the minor has been given to be raised and educated'. These acts of violence punished by the Penal Code are referred to in Article 1 of Law No. 217/2003 on Prevention and Control of Domestic Violence, modified and completed by Law No. 25 from March 2012. The Methodology Framework for Multidisciplinary Prevention and Intervention Units and Networks on Cases of Violence against Children, as approved by Governmental Decision No. 49/2011, includes genital mutilation under its definition of sexual abuse. The framework applies to all Romanian children, as well as to the children of foreign citizens, with or without refugee status, who are present in Romania.

Asylum law

Law No. 122/2006 regulates asylum in Romania, and applies the refugee definition stated in the Geneva Convention. When a woman or girl can prove a justified fear of persecution because of membership of a particular social group, she can be granted asylum.

Professional secrecy law

General laws with regard to professional secrecy and disclosure may be applied to report cases of performed or planned FGM. Article 37 of Governmental Decision H.G. No. 774/2000, on the organisation and functioning of legal medicine institutions, states that the right to confidentiality is limited if the legal doctor suspects that a crime, which qualifies for

About the study

In order to contribute to identifying and filling the gaps in prevalence data collection and support the development of strategies for combating female genital mutilation (FGM), the European Institute for Gender Equality has commissioned the 'Study to map the current situation and trends of female genital mutilation in 27 EU Member States and Croatia'. The study was launched at the request of Viviane Reding, Vice-President of the European Commission. It was conducted by the International Centre for Reproductive Health (ICRH) of the Ghent University and Yellow Window Management Consultants (a division of E.A.D.C.).

The desk research in the 27 EU Member States and Croatia and the in-depth research in nine EU Member States brings about the first collection of information and data, legal and policy framework, actors, tools and methods in the area of FGM in the EU. The different national approaches to tackle FGM in the EU were analysed and compared in order to identify practices with potential in prevention, protection, prosecution, provision of services, partnership and prevalence.

The data provided in this publication were collected through desk research conducted between December 2011 and April 2012. More information and references about the study are available at: eige.europa.eu

What is female genital mutilation?

- Female genital mutilation (FGM), also known as female genital cutting, is a form of gender-based violence. It comprises all procedures involving partial or total removal of the external female genitalia or other injury to the female genital organs for non-medical reasons.
- Female genital mutilation has negative effects on the health of women in the short, medium and long term and may even lead to death. It is carried out for both cultural and social reasons. Religious arguments tend to be used to justify the practice but there is no religious mandate for it.
- According to UNICEF, FGM is practised in more than 20 African countries spreading between Senegal in the west and Somalia in the east.
- Although overall figures are difficult to estimate, thousands of women and girls residing in the European Union may have been genitally mutilated or are at risk of FGM.
- The EU institutions and the Member States are committed to fighting FGM, as it is shown in the Commission's 'Strategy for equality between women and men (2010–2015)'. The Daphne III programme has played a crucial role in putting FGM on the agenda in several EU countries and in providing financial support for the implementation of transnational projects in this field.
- The European Parliament resolution of 14 June 2012 on ending female genital mutilation clearly stipulates that 'any form of female genital mutilation is a harmful traditional practice that cannot be considered part of a religion, but is an act of violence against women and girls which constitutes a violation of their fundamental rights'. The European Parliament calls on the Member States to take a firm action to combat this illegal practice.

prosecution ex officio, may have occurred. This principle of disclosure only applies under the proviso that the medical examination is done at the request of the interested parties. Child abuse qualifies as a condition for disclosure.

POLICY FRAMEWORK

Policies on broader topics such as violence against women and child protection might be applied to FGM. There are no specific policies on FGM in Romania, due to the very low number of women coming from FGM-practising countries.

PREVALENCE OF FGM IN THE COUNTRY

As of February 2012, no prevalence study on FGM had been conducted in Romania. This can be explained by the low number of migrants from countries where FGM is performed.

Figures

- There are records of four claims for asylum requested on the grounds of FGM. Asylum was granted in two cases.

Facts

- A report on domestic violence of 2004 acknowledges that FGM is a form of violence against women, but states that there are no reported cases of FGM in Romania.

What is gender-based violence?

- Gender-based violence is a violation of human rights and a form of discrimination. It is defined as violence directed against a person on the basis of gender. Gender-based violence reflects and reinforces inequalities between men and women and results in physical, mental and sexual harm. It includes, among others: domestic violence, rape, sexual harassment, sexual violence during conflict, female genital mutilation, forced marriages, forced prostitution, forced sterilisation, female infanticide and prenatal sex selection.
- In the European Pact for Gender Equality (2011–2020) the Council of the European Union reaffirms its commitment to fulfil EU ambitions regarding gender equality as mentioned in the Treaty. In particular, it emphasises the need to combat all forms of violence against women in order to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights by women and girls and, as a consequence, to enhance gender equality with a view to creating inclusive growth and development in labour markets in Europe.
- The European Parliament Resolution on the elimination of violence against women of 26 November 2009 urges Member States to improve, among others, their national laws and policies to combat all forms of violence against women, in particular through the development of comprehensive national action plans to combat violence against women.
- The European Commission's Strategy for Equality between Women and Men 2010–2015 emphasises the importance of combating violence against women. The Stockholm Programme 2009 highlights the need for special support and legal protection for victims of violence against women. In addition, the Women's Charter 2010 envisages the implementation of a comprehensive and effective policy framework to combat gender-based violence as well as the strengthening of the measures to eradicate female genital mutilation and other acts of violence.

About the European Institute for Gender Equality (EIGE)

The European Institute for Gender Equality is the EU knowledge centre on gender equality. EIGE supports policymakers and all relevant institutions in their efforts to make equality between women and men a reality for all Europeans and beyond, by providing them with specific expertise and comparable and reliable information on gender equality in Europe.
