

Men don't do that: domestic division of labor

In the paper, data obtained within the framework of a broader pilot research of characteristics of family life have been used. The answers of 152 respondents who were married and employed at the time were analysed. The results suggest (1) that domestic labour division between marital partners is still discriminating, with a much greater work involvement of women; (2) that men look after children more than they are engaged in carrying out domestic chores; (3) that domestic labour is greatly exposed to gender segregation, which is also confirmed by the results of the logit analysis.

Format: pdf-file

---

Weblinks

Website

Metadata

TYPE: Other

CREATOR/AUTHOR: Topolčić, Davor

PUBLISHER: Zagreb: The Journal of General Social Issues

RIGHTS: Copyrighted

LANGUAGE: Croatian

COVERAGE: Croatia

SECTOR: Employment

FORMAT: Journal

KEYWORDS: division of labour, gender distribution of paid and unpaid work, homework, equality between women and men

