
Shall I lend my face to the story?

The article discusses different views of Hungarian journalists and women's rights NGOs' representatives on the most appropriate approach to discussing the issue of domestic violence and to portraying its victims. The current media practice seems largely negative in that it often portrays violence against women as a romantic act and blames the victims, thereby influencing public discourse on the issue negatively. Also, by letting the victims reveal their identity they often harm them and their families. NGO experts emphasize the importance of the media's treating the issue seriously and responsibly, protecting the victims' identity and cooperating with civil society.

Format: Website

Weblinks

Website

Metadata

TYPE: Publication

CREATOR/AUTHOR: Prischetzky, Réka

PUBLISHER: Budapest: Mű-Hely Egyesület (Workshop Association)

RIGHTS: Property of author

LANGUAGE: Hungarian

COVERAGE: Hungary

KEYWORDS: gender stereotypes