

Beijing+20 factsheet - Area K: Women and the Environment

Policy Context

A global consensus to address environmental issues - particularly concerning Climate Change and its risks - is becoming gradually established at local, national, regional, climate, scientific, social, education and high level levels. Awareness of the differentiated effects of environmental issues on women and men and the ways in which gender inequalities undermine women's ability to respond to these threats is increasing, strengthened by the evidence of women's and men's different consumption habits.

Climate Change Mitigation in the EU in general

- Implements measures to energy efficiency, sustainable transport and carbon capture and storage and promotes a growing role in international conventions on climate change.

Conclusions of the Council of the European Union (June 2012)

- Stresses the urgent need to improve gender equality in decision-making in the field of climate change mitigation, especially the transport and energy sectors.
- Stresses that gender-equal participation and knowledge help promote a gender-responsive educational system and labour market, including the roles of the green economy, which are most vital for climate change mitigation (eg. transport and energy without).

The European Parliament (2007 – 12)

- Calls on the Commission and the Council to ensure that climate change action plans not negatively impact gender equality and to mainstream gender into climate policies.
- Requests the executive gender equality and calls for research on the impact on economic and then also in the transport.

The European Commission

- Considers energy and transport as a priority area (COM(2007) 370 final).

The strategic objectives of the BPfA and the EU indicators

- K.1. Involve women actively in environmental decision-making at all levels.
- K.2. Integrate gender equality and gender equality in policies and programmes for sustainable development.
- K.3. Strengthen or create institutions at the national, regional and international levels to ensure the parity of engagement and environmental public education.

The indicators in the central area of concern were developed jointly following the initiative of the Secretariat of the Council of the EU. An environmental challenge is important to women's education, their education focuses on the effective research field to improve climate change decision-making areas, especially climate change mitigation. Further, they stress the participation of women and men in the fields of natural science and technology and gender integration within educational choices. Activities concerning the action and that strategic objectives of Area K of the BPfA are not available. Thus, these objectives - calling for a better integration of a gender perspective in environmental policies and programmes - remain to be addressed.

The database, Women and men in the EU - facts and figures, developed by the European Institute for Gender Equality provides the basic data and information on their indicators available in:
