

Data collection on intimate partner violence by the police and justice sectors: Ireland

Data collection on intimate partner violence by the police and justice sectors
Ireland

Why do we need administrative data on intimate partner violence?

Many women victims of intimate partner violence in the EU Member States remain unprotected. Perpetrators often go unpunished due to inadequate law enforcement approaches, which do not align with international human rights treaties. A gender-neutral approach to the law, coupled with the unavailability of data and existing stereotypes result in the denial of violence against women and its tolerance or normalisation. States must ensure that they carry out the due diligence principle to investigate and punish acts of violence and provide compensation to victims. Improving data collection and providing comprehensive and reliable administrative data is crucial to monitor the police and justice sectors' response to violence against women. It also allows states to objectively measure the effectiveness of law. High-quality administrative data is in line with the international commitments of Member States to combat violence against women as defined in Directive 2012/29/EU, the Istanbul Convention and the Istanbul Convention.

The European Institute for Gender Equality (EIGE) defines intimate partner violence as all acts of physical, sexual, psychological or economic violence that occur between former or current spouses or partners, whether or not the perpetrator shares or has shared the same residence with the victim. It constitutes a form of violence which affects women disproportionately and which is therefore distinctly gendered.

2020 definition of intimate partner violence is defined as the definition of domestic violence of the Istanbul Convention.

In Ireland, 65% of women have been victims of violence in their lifetime.

Only 29% of those victims contacted the police.

Source: Women's Aid (2019), 'A Year of Violence Against Women in Ireland', Dublin: Women's Aid, 2019.

Many women victims of intimate partner violence in the EU Member States remain unprotected. Perpetrators often go unpunished due to inadequate law enforcement approaches, which do not align with international human rights treaties. A gender-neutral approach to the law, coupled with the unavailability of data and existing stereotypes result in the denial of violence against women and its tolerance or normalisation. States must ensure that they carry out the due diligence principle to investigate and punish acts of violence and provide compensation to victims. Improving data collection and providing comprehensive and reliable administrative data is crucial to monitor the police and justice sectors' response to violence against women.

Read more

Data collection on intimate partner violence by the police and justice sectors - all EU countries →

Indicators on intimate partner violence and rape for the police and justice sectors

EIGE's work on data collection on violence against women

Downloads

Data collection on intimate partner violence by the police and justice sectors: Ireland

EN (PDF, 641.67 KB)

Metadata

COUNTRY: Ireland

AREAS: Data collection on violence against women, Gender-based violence

AUTHOR: EIGE

ISBN: 978-92-9470-333-0

DOI: 10.2839/559809