

Grey literature on research

The screenshot shows a webpage with an orange header containing the EIGE logo and the title 'Grey literature on research'. The main content area is white with orange accents. It includes several text blocks and a photograph of a woman in a lab coat working in a laboratory. The text discusses the definition of grey literature, its availability in multiple languages, and the underrepresentation of women in research. It also lists various resources available in the library, such as policy processes, research reports, and statistical documents.

European research still shows a significant underrepresentation of women, particularly in the 'hard sciences' and in leadership positions. Highly skilled women in the EU are left out, which is a considerable loss of talent. Gender equality in research is therefore not only about fairness, but also necessary to fill gaps in the EU's labour market.
