Brief description:

National Court Administration has a tool to check the recorded information of courts and periodically check the information. When any incorrect information is found the courts should correct the information. Also, the courts sometimes apply to the National Court Administration to figure out whether the information on the appointed sentences is already in the system or other information about the case was included in the system. thus additional check is undertaken.

Accuracy

Problems. The strength of the system is that available information about the case is possible to find fast, it allow to low down the work load of the courts. However, many employees in the courts records the information and not necessary follow the single standardized form for recording. Therefore different issues of information appears or does not appear in the system.

Reliability

Limitations. The biggest limitation is the absence of the standardized procedure for recording data and each court has their own system to record. Therefore, it depends on the court how they will record information. The other issue is that statistical files are constantly renewed because of change in the articles of Criminal Code therefore these changes constantly should appear in the system and in the statistical reports.

Timeliness

Good. Statistics are accumulated each half a year and one year. They are started to be generated each three months and when any mistake is identified the courts have one week to correct. reported time is one year and statistics appear in February of the consequent year
