

Less than 1 in 4 'on-air' voices are women

A new survey conducted by the National Women's Council of Ireland shows that less than one quarter of voices in radio news and current affairs broadcasting are women. The survey was conducted in March as part of research for the NWCI submission to the Broadcasting Authority of Ireland (BAI) for the draft Code on fairness and objectivity in news and current affairs. It shows that Ireland's current affairs programmes are everywhere dominated by male voices as presenters, expert guests, in headlines, sports and business.

Key stakeholders mentioned:

National Women's Council, Broadcasting Authority of Ireland, RTE, Newstalk FM

Weblinks

Website

Metadata

TYPE: Other

CREATOR/AUTHOR: National Womens Council of Ireland

PUBLISHER: Dublin: National Womens Council

RIGHTS: National Womens Council

LANGUAGE: English

COVERAGE: Ireland

KEYWORDS: access to expression, occupational segregation