

Instituties voor emancipatiebeleid: Nederland in internationale context

This is one of the specialized reports accompanying the final report of the Review Committee Emancipation. It presents a conceptual model on women's policy machineries. The trends and changes between the mid-1990s and time of publication (2007) in institutional structures for gender equality policies are discussed. Focus is on the Netherlands, but these findings are placed in the context of an international study on state feminism which covered 12 countries. The report concludes that the institutional structures for gender equality have weakened in the Netherlands.
