

Risk assessment: protecting women from lethal violence

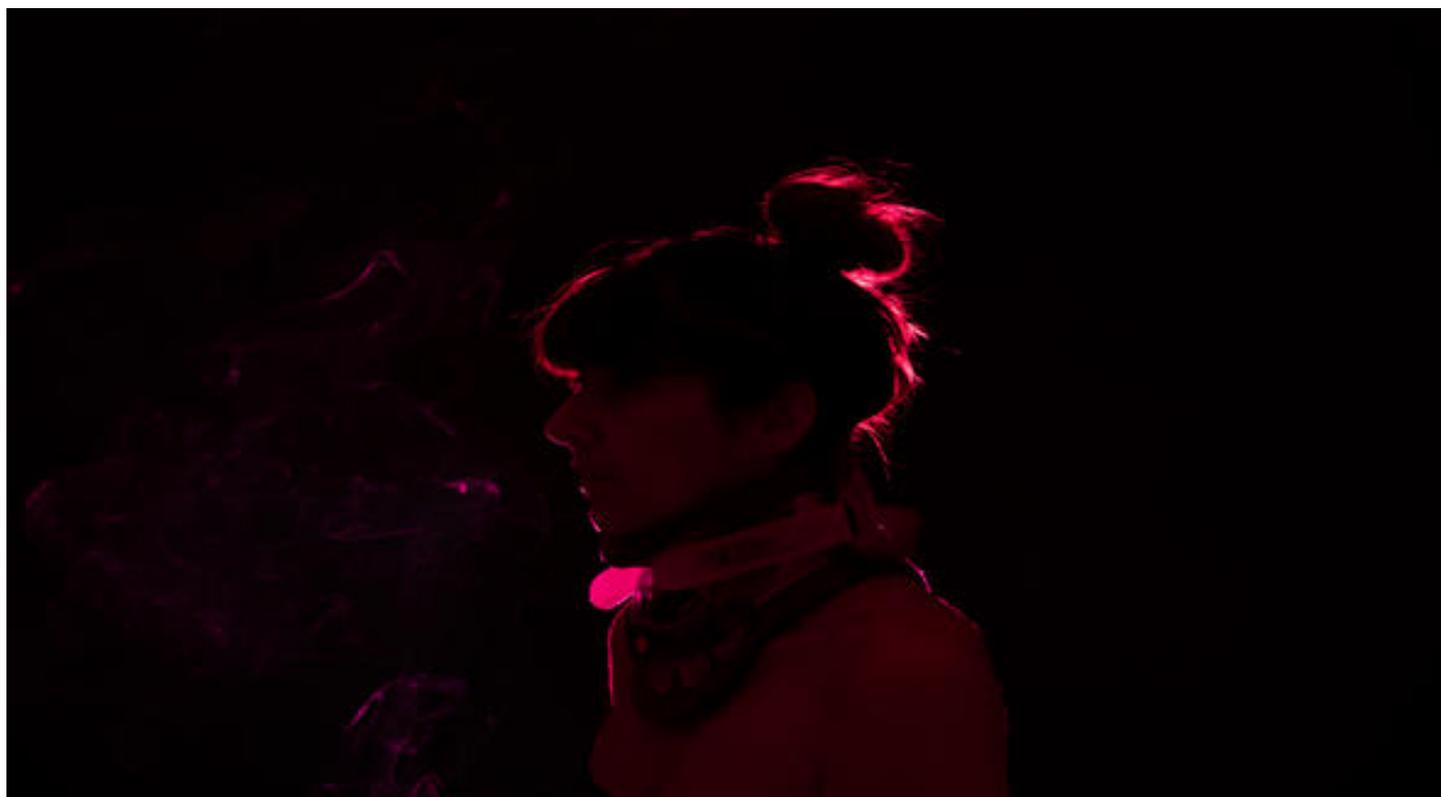

Photo: Chiara Luxardo

More than one woman was killed every day by an intimate partner or family member in the EU on average in 2016^[1]. To help police prevent repeated acts of intimate partner violence and save lives, the European Institute for Gender Equality (EIGE) has developed a risk assessment guide for police.

“With proper training, and allocation of resources where they are most needed, our guide can help police improve victim safety. In the long run, this can help to improve trust in police and encourage reporting,” says Virginija Langbakk, EIGE’s director in the lead up to the international day to eliminate violence against women.

One of the innovative aspects of the guide is the multi-agency approach to risk assessment, which is not a common practice around the EU. In most cases, the victims of violence are treated in isolation, with different authorities working in silos.

EIGE's guide shows the benefit of the police, justice and health sectors working together to make sure that victims get the essential services in time. These can range from counselling services to financial assistance.

The guide also recommends that an individual risk assessment strategy be developed in close cooperation with the victim. It should take their specific situation and needs into account to ensure that they are protected in a way that best fits their needs and those of their children.

EIGE's risk assessment guide can also assist Member States with their reporting obligations under the Istanbul Convention, Victims' Rights Directive and EU protection order legislation. It offers a way to transform articles from these legal texts into concrete actions on the ground.

In addition to the guide, EIGE has also published a report that gives an overview of risk assessment and management practices in each EU Member State. It outlines the approach taken by each country, identifies gaps and challenges, and proposes a way to improve the existing policies.

To raise awareness about violence against women and kick-off the '16 days of activism against gender-based violence' campaign, important monuments around the world will be lit up in orange. EIGE will light up Europe House in Vilnius on 25 November and the European Commission's headquarters in Brussels will light up on 24 November.

For media enquiries, please contact Veronica Collins, +370 5 2157 449, veronica.collins@eige.europa.eu

Read more about EIGE's new guide for risk assessment and risk management.

Read the overview report on risk assessment and management.

Read the European Commission's press statement.

[1] In 2016, 16 EU Member States reported a total of 788 women killed by a partner or family member. In the remaining 12 Member States there is no comparable or available data disaggregated by sex and the relationship between the victim and the perpetrator on women victims of intentional homicide. Read more in EIGE's Gender Equality Index 2019.

Downloads

Rekomendacija Lietuvai: kaip mažinti mirtinus smurto atvejus prieš moteris

LT (PDF, 442.63 KB)

Metadata

KEYWORDS: gender-based violence