

Grey literature on sport

The screenshot shows the 'Grey literature on sport' page from the EIGE Resource and Documentation Centre. The page features an orange header with the EIGE logo and the title 'Grey literature on sport'. Below the header, there are several text blocks and an image. The first block explains what grey literature is and where it can be found. The second block, titled 'The relevance of gender in sport', discusses the social construction of femininity and masculinity and how sport can be used to achieve gender equality. The third block, 'Grey literature in EIGE's library', lists various resources available in the library. The fourth block, 'Mainstreaming gender into the sport field: policies and data', provides a reading list of relevant documents. An image of a woman in a white shirt and blue shorts holding a basketball is also present.

The social construction of femininity and masculinity plays a key role in sport. However, sport can also be used as a means to achieve gender equality through the promotion of values such as fair play, non-discrimination and teamwork. It can also be used to increase opportunities for girls.
